Kriti is five years old. She is the only child of her parents. Her mother works for a TV channel and her father works at a bank. Every morning her mother wakes her up and gets her ready for school. Every night she asks kriti what she would like to take for tiffin the next day, and makes delicious food for her. She knows that Kriti is learning about different shapes in class so she makes small chapattis and tikkis for her in different shapes. Her friends marvel at her when she opens her tiffin at lunch time.

When Kriti comes back from school her nanny comes to pick her up from the bus stop. She gets home, changes her clothes and freshens up before having lunch, after lunch she sits down for her homework and if she has any difficulties she waits for her father or mother to get home and help her.

Every day she could see that her father would come back home tired, and yet when her mother came in, he would always welcome her with a smile and offer her a glass of water.

Kriti was always happy because she rarely saw her parents arguing. She enjoyed school too. One evening kriti decided she should do something for her father. She waited for him to come home from work. The moment the bell rang, she ran to the kitchen and fetched a glass of water for him on a tray. Her father gave her a hug. He was very happy to see that kriti was so thoughtful. Kriti made this her habit and got a glass of water when her father came back from the bank every day.
